In 1991 Robert Perkins was the first Westerner to travel in Kamchatka in 75 years. This film relates the story of the land, the adventure, the volcanoes, and the people of this unknown peninsula, the world's most heavily-guarded border during the Cold War. Rob travels with a Russian wildlife photographer, by canoe, down the Kamchatka River on a quest for, among other things, the famous Siberian blue trout. (16mm)

This hour-long film will be presented with readings and discussion with Rob Perkins
